

PROFITABLE HOG FOOD

LINSEED OILMEAL IS RECOMMENDED

Professor of Animal Husbandry at Columbia Tells of Its Usefulness

Every farmer knows that oilmeal is good for cattle and also that it will give a great gloss to the coat of a horse but when it comes to feeding hogs most farmers consider oilmeal to be too expensive, that it will make oily pork, and many even believe that for hogs it is a dangerous feed requiring to be used with great care.

At the same time many of these same men are buying oilmeal in patent stock foods for their hogs, and little is the wonder, for oil meal is a remarkable feed, and if it has taken the stock food people to properly impress this fact upon us, then we are indebted to these gentlemen for a service.

The Missouri Experiment Station has fed oilmeal with corn to a great many hogs in the past three years. The packers tell us that the pork produced is very firm and the fat hard and white. There is less oil in new process oilmeal than in corn. Oilmeal does not make oily pork.

In four tests with young hogs weighing about 400 lbs. each and fed out at fat hog weights, we made 100 lbs. of pork with an average expenditure of 376 pounds of a five parts corn and one part oilmeal. It takes about 560 pounds of corn alone to make 100 lbs. of pork.

Oilmeal is a great appetizer as well as a laxative. Hogs will eat too much, for best profits, of a ration containing it, if allowed to do so. Feed a little less of the ration than the hogs want.

In one experiment we cut out and weighed the tenderloin muscles of five pigs at the time our feeding began. Then we took similar weights from the carcasses of the hogs in the experiment, after they had been fed for sixty days. In the lot getting corn alone these muscles had increased in weight in 60 days to the extent of 17 percent but these muscles in the hogs receiving oilmeal had grown 54 per cent heavier. But still more interesting—the muscles of the corn fed pigs contained 65 per cent. more fat, while the muscles of the oilmeal fed pigs contained only 9 per cent. more fat than at the beginning of the experiment. Still the oilmeal pigs had gained in weight 84 per cent more than the corn fed pigs and also dressed out a little higher per cent. of carcass to live weight. The oilmeal hogs had put their fat on the outside of the carcass, where it produced a smooth and attractive finish, but the corn-fed hogs had laid much more fat in between the muscular fibres.

To purchase oilmeal at reasonable prices one should buy directly from the factory.

CLEVELAND SANFORD

Nephew of J M Sanford Dies at Eureka

J M Sanford, the well known farmer east of town hands us a copy of a Eureka Springs Paper containing the following account of the death of his nephew, Cleveland Sanford at Eureka Springs recently. The young man's parents formerly lived in this locality and were well known by the older settlers:

All Eureka Spring mourns with the respected parents of Cleveland Sanford who died yesterday (Sunday) morning, January 28th, at 4 a. m. at their home in this city. He was one of the honest, straight-forward, industrious young men of the city, a pride to his parents and loved by all his associates and respected by all acquaintances. All his life has been spent in Eureka Springs, and up to within a very few weeks it had been a healthy and vigorous life. When it was announced that he was near death's door, it was hard for our people to believe, and until the last they cherished the hope that his vigorous system would pull him through a malady that his physicians could not understand. Some affliction of the heart or stomach is supposed to have caused his death.

His business career was aggressive yet liberal. Quiet, and unassuming in demeanor, he had many beautiful traits of character that will ever be remembered by his friends. While he was engaged in the plumbing business, he had provided in one of his buildings a cot, mattress and blankets, on which many a journeyman plumber has rested weary bones after a long tramp, and each of these were always fed and started on their journey with change in their pockets.

He was one young man whom the writer has known from infancy, and against whom he has never a criticism, or even the expression of dislike.

The funeral which took place this afternoon from the family home was one of the most largely attended that ever occurred in Eureka Springs. Rev. P C Fletcher, of Fayetteville, a former pastor of the city, had, on the request of the deceased been invited to conduct the services, but was unable to attend and Rev J Sherman of the M E church South delivered the address. A number of the schoolmates and associates of his life acted as pall bearers. After this ceremony, the Odd Fellows of which order he was a member, took charge of the remains, and a large concourse of citizens followed the remains to the cemetery.

As the funeral procession left the home, the fire bell commenced to toll the age of twenty two. Cleveland Sanford was one of the most active members of Eureka Springs' fire department, and his services and association will be greatly missed by the department.

FINE TEACHERS' MEETING

SPEECHES BY NOTED EDUCATORS HEARD BY GREAT THROU

Plans for Better Country Schools—More Practical Opportunities for the Rural Route

Most of the teachers of this locality attended the teachers' meeting at Carthage Saturday, and report it a most interesting gathering. The principal features were addresses by Prof. L. D. Harvey, of Menomonee, Wis., and Prof. C. J. Kern of Winnebago county, Ill., two of the best known school men in their respective lines in the country. A synopsis of their talks as given by the Press is as follows:

Prof. Harvey's subject was "Industrial Education," and he proceeded to show that the training of the hand and eye in "doing things" is incidentally one of the very best forms of mental training. The burden of his talk was that the pupils should have that self reliance which comes with the ability to apply knowledge to the act of correctly accomplishing things. Books and abstract ideas were quoted as being all right as they go, but the ability to apply knowledge to the practical things of life should be developed. The process of developing this ability generally stimulates to a very great extent their interest in books and abstract ideas themselves, the speaker claimed.

It was further stated that where manual training and domestic science are added to high school courses which appear to be already full that they so stimulate the students that they seem to actually accomplish more work in addition to the new work than they did without it.

The address by Prof. O. J. Kern, county superintendent of Winnebago county, Ill. was illustrated by stereopticon pictures, and proved of the greatest interest. His subject was "Means of increasing the Usefulness of the country schools."

The speaker has had much success in inaugurating plant growing and crop growing contests among country children and spoke of these. He elaborated on the success of the rural high school, where several country rural school districts are united and a common building erected commensurate with the needs of the larger number of children, an affording much greater advantages than single small schools could afford. The children are carried back and forth between school and home by district wagons at some of the schools. The pictures showed many such schools and the wagons used in conveying the children.

Prof. J. D. Elliff, professor of school administration of the state university, delivered an address on the subject "A square deal for the country boy and girl." His speech was an arraignment of the present school system in this country, by which the average country child who wishes to carry his study into the high school branches, can not do so without paying tuition somewhere. He did not go into particulars as to the remedy, but elaborated the many ways in which this situation does injustice to the average country child.

The humorous incident of the morning occurred at the close of the speeches when an unknown man arose in the audience and asked the chairman for an opportunity to be heard.

"Just for a moment," said the chairman.

"Well, I just wanted to say a word about the schoolma'ams," said he. "I have attended these teachers' institutes in 5 different states and never have I seen a lot of school ma'ams who had such clean shirt waists, such nice wool skirts and such nice looking hats." He was duly applauded a roar of laughter.

HOUNDS KILL A WOLF.

Harvey Goff, Buster Owen And 14 Dogs Have Rare Sport Near Town.

"A wolf chase almost within the shadow of the court house—so to speak—was the exciting pastime of Harvey Goff, Buster Owen and 14 hounds the other day says the Carthage Press.

"Three varmints were sighted and at last reports one had been trailed to his lair and killed by the hounds but not before two of the dogs were injured badly and the 12 others showed bloody marks of a frightful conflict. For weeks the hen coop at the Goff farm two miles northeast of town has suffered from the ravages of wolves. With the true Goff love to hunt and chase—for Harvey is a nephew of the great Roosevelt guide at Meeker, Col.,—he enlisted the aid of Buster Owen and together they rounded up 14 hounds.

"All day Saturday they followed the scene and at nightfall saw one wolf bite the mud. They kept on. Another was seen but he got away. Later the music of the hounds in the distance indicated that another was not far off but the finish of the chase is not known here.
